

This is a set of ten stories based largely on events that actually unfolded – ‘fictionalised fact’ – followed by rich discussions between groups of stakeholders, as they reflect on the questions raised by these stories.

“A highly enjoyable and stimulating book ... probably the only such book available with Indian experience.”

– Sharad Behar, Chief Secretary (retired), Govt of Madhya Pradesh

“What came through quite strongly was the deep emotion which runs below relationships between some teachers and their students ... so like the relationships between parents and their children.”

– Amman Madan, Parent

“There are hardly such spaces like these where one gets to express one’s thoughts and also put forth arguments in a simple manner, without being ‘academic’ and without the burden of being ‘right’ or ‘wrong’.”

– Nisha Butoliya, Teacher Educator

“Testing Times was the story that I could relate to the most ... the most familiar thing was the fear of exams and how we are judged based on the scores we get.”

– Mansi Pai, Student

“The spirited debate of the students’ group touched me greatly ...”

– Satyabrata Biswal, Teacher

“I congratulate your team’s efforts and the exemplary initiative that you have taken to bring all the stakeholders into a discussion.”

– Kausalya Srinivasan, Founder-Director of a school

“The story Let Me Dance has given me a multidimensional view ... by putting me in the shoes of a student and a teacher as well.”

– Shalini Das, Teacher Trainee
